KISO Capital Launches Growth Capital Debt Fund

February 5, 2021

KISO Capital (KISO), a specialty finance company based in Silicon Valley, is pleased to announce the launch of KISO Capital, LP, a growth capital debt fund focused on providing bootstrapped and venture-backed companies with efficient and flexible growth capital debt financing solutions. Licensed under California's Department of Financial Protection & Innovation (DFPI), KISO Capital, LP is a Delaware Limited Partnership with an evergreen and open-ended fund structure.

KISO was founded and managed by Damon Doe, Tony Huang, and Ted Bojorquez, with all three serving as the fund's managing general partners. With over 80 years of combined hands-on experience in lending, direct investments, and startup operations, the principals of KISO have collectively financed over 500 companies and deployed over one billion in capital across a broad spectrum of industry verticals and through multiple economic cycles. In addition to the principals' depth of experience in financing emerging growth companies, the KISO platform is further complemented by a team of venture partners and industry advisors including Don Suh, Managing Partner of KORUS Partners; David Jeng, Chief Strategy and Risk officer of Wintec Industries; and Kai Huang, serial entrepreneur and creator of the global video game franchise, Guitar Hero.

KISO seeks to partner with emerging growth companies, both bootstrapped and venture backed, who are looking for less restrictive and minimally dilutive financing alternatives to traditional bank debt or equity financing. KISO's credit solutions are flexible and customized to each company's unique needs, and may be structured as revolving lines of credits, senior or subordinated term loans, revenue or milestone based loans, as well as more conventional structures including asset or cashflow based loans.
